

Are you a social studies teacher teaching about ancient civilizations this year? A history teacher teaching about local history? A science teacher teaching about soil deposition and erosion? What do all these subjects have in common? Archaeology! We have a new, free resource for you and your students.

Friends of ASOR presents "Ask an Archaeologist," a brand new YouTube series dedicated to finding out what you and your students want to know about archaeology. The series is based on questions submitted by viewers. Viewers' questions will be answered by professional archaeologists with years of experience.

"Ask an Archaeologist" provides reliable, entertaining, and educational information about archaeology in video form. It provides an opportunity to connect students with professional archaeologists from around the world.

We are currently, and always, accepting questions. This could be used as a group or individual activity challenging students to create interesting questions, answered by real archaeologists, and viewed by thousands of people.

To submit questions:

- E-mail questions to ASORmedia@gmail.com with the subject "Ask An Archaeologist."
- Use #AskAnArchaeologist on Twitter or Facebook.
- Tweet us directly @AmerSchOrientRes
- Comment on our Facebook page.
- We are also accepting video question submissions.

You can find episodes of "Ask An Archaeologist" on ASOR's YouTube channel, ASORtv.

Feel free to spread the word with other teachers and community members. You do not have to be a student to submit a question. We're accepting submissions from people of all backgrounds and ages. So whether you're an archaeology buff or just a fan of Indiana Jones, we look forward to hearing from you!

If you have any more questions, feel free to contact us here at ASOR.

Sincerely,
